The Farm Heritage Trail follows the former route of the Big Four Railroad in Boone County, Indiana and beyond. The corridor has been serving the transportation needs of the region since 1852 when the railroad first put the line into service.

The Friends of Boone County Trails, a not-for-profit volunteer group, began work on the corridor in 2000 - almost 160 years after the first train ran along the line. In less than 10 years the abandoned railroad has been converted from an overgrown and almost unrecognizable corridor to one of the premier long distance trails in the state. This could not have been done without the support of Boone County along with the time and energy of countless volunteers and financial donations from many individuals and organizations.

Today 20 miles of trail connects cities and towns across the county. Plans are now underway to extend the trail 10 miles south to Zionsville. Eventually the trail will expand north creating a connection to Lafayette. Once complete the 40 mile trail will cross through some of the most beautiful farm country in America!
